The quantitative and qualitative morphological changes of the small and large intestine were studied in neurogenic diarrhoea. The experimental model consisted of a severe colitis, induced by an enema of 2 ml of 4% dextran-sodium-saccharose solution, in 5 min, followed by a recovery period of 7 days. The colitis was characterized by chronic inflammation, with foci of ulceration in the epithelium and alterations of the microcirculation. A significant increase in goblet cells in the small intestine was found during the course of the study. Our study reveals a subepithelial infiltration of lymphocytes, some of which coexist with plasma cells. Intestinal wall thickness was increased, and there was a significant increase in collagen and elastin fibres. The total number of goblet cells and collagen fibres were also increased in the crypts.

These results suggest that the histological features of the colonic

mucosa in experimental neurogenic diarrhoea are characterized by a non-specific inflammation, that is, the alterations seen are not necessarily dependent on the presence of intestinal motility. Some of the most-discussed films on the upcoming 2017 slate don't have word titles. Only Rian Johnson and director Christopher Nolan's movies have been officially announced, but some of the most prominent films haven't been confirmed either. Michael Mann and Leonardo DiCaprio's Moby Dick follows in the footsteps of last year's Inception, where only the cover art leaked and a movie's title wasn't confirmed until the release date. Paul Feig's Ghostbusters has been another one of those films. While the phrase "ghostbusters" is in the title of this film, it's not quite the same as Inception because Feig's movies aren't stories where they travel back in time to catch ghosts. They're comedies about four strangers trying to start their own Ghostbusters-style business. But the trailer only showed a woman in a white robe who appeared to be using Vibranium. Now, MTV is saying that the true

Lamborghini, an Italian automotive site, reported on Wednesday that Aston Martin is working on a hybrid version of the company's Vantage sports car. The report cited the French-based automaker as saying that the hybrid's powertrain would come from a lithium-ion battery supplied by Murata. Automobili Lamborghini reported that the hybrid version of the Vantage is scheduled for a mid-2016 release. The publication said that the hybrid Vantage would be able to drive for 30 to 60 kilometers on pure electric power, and add an extra 60 to 100 kilometers of range by running on both the battery and gasoline.

Automobili Lamborghini did not say whether the hybrid version of the Vantage would be officially called the "Vantage" or "Vantage Hybrid."

Aston Martin declined to comment on Automobili Lamborghini's report. The automaker has been working on electrification and other hybridization projects for the Vantage. For instance, in May, Aston Martin showed a prototype of the Vantage sporting a new look. It also showed a battery-powered Vantage Concept, an electric version of the Vantage. The automaker has said that a fully electric version of the Vantage will launch in the second half of 2019. Automobili Lamborghini said that both the electric and the hybrid Vantage will be built at Aston Martin's Gaydon plant.

The host response to sepsis is the consequence of the interaction of immunologic and non-immunologic factors. The immunologic factors are those leading to inflammation. Sepsis is an inflammatory process associated with infection and triggered by endogenous factors. Exogenous factors, such as surgery, trauma, burns, or other, and chemo- or radiotherapy, predispose to this type of response. The inflammatory response in sepsis can be seen at different levels, from the primary inflammatory response of the host itself to the interaction between the inflammatory response and the immunologic response. The latter includes the cellular and humoral response. The primary source of inflammation is at the infection site, where infection leads to the activation of complement, coagulation, and kinin systems, among others. The endothelial cell activation by infection is followed by the production of a range of factors and cytokines that stimulate the immunologic response, particularly that of macrophages. At the same time, other factors and mediators are produced at the infection site, which promote the persistence of the infection. After 24 hours, the source of this systemic response can be found in the release of cytokines in the blood. The activation of the complement system is an important pathophysiological feature of sepsis. These mediators and factors are among the principal mediators of organ dysfunction in sepsis. Effects of the surface treatment of quartz on the bioactivity of Co-Cr-Mo alloys. Co-Cr-Mo alloy is commonly used for total joint replacement, but, because it is a passive metal, it has poor resistance to infection. The surface treatment of a Co-Cr-Mo alloy with a hydroxyapatite coating is a promising option to improve the bioactivity. In this study, the effects of surface treatments of the Co-Cr-Mo alloy on the apatite layer formation and its bioactivity were investigated. The surfaces of Co-Cr-Mo alloy were treated by sandblasting, electropol
