Ba. In the latest example of its aggressive behavior, the Palestinian Authority has decided to stop paying its citizens' salaries. This amounts to a "collective punishment" (the PA routinely does this), a cash grab (which is a feature of Palestinian governance), a demand that Israel surrender its sovereignty over West Bank and Gaza (which is part of the Palestinian Authority's charter and treaties), and a hand out of PA money that it thinks will get the residents of Judea and Samaria and Gaza to quit and leave their homes. Ironically, the PA also believes that this will make the populace want to return to an arrangement by which Israel would keep the cash while it would free them of Israeli soldiers. The PA has recently reversed a 2010 decision of the Palestinian Legislative Council that would have allowed "all citizens of Palestine to travel and work freely in the entire 1967 borders of the State of Israel." This, of course, makes its citizens dependent on the regime, and suggests that PA leaders truly have no power and are frustrated by their impotence in dealing with Israel. Yasser Abed Rabbo, a PLO official, said that they would no longer pay salaries of Palestinian workers in Judea and Samaria and Gaza. In a statement, he declared, "The government of Palestine stresses the importance of implementing the decision on salaries, since citizens' [lives] depend on [it]." He went on, saying "Since the government of Palestine has a definitive commitment to the release of the prisoners, it must also fulfill its commitments to and obligations to all its people, especially those who are deprived of their salaries." He added that the government "fully supports the prisoners' movement and its continuation, so that all prisoners, including those under arrest who have not yet been jailed, can be released." It seems that the Palestinian Authority, despite its ambitions for statehood, will be forced to confront the fact that without Israelis, the "Palestine" that it wishes to have will not even exist. Ask HN: Why is there no proof for existence of God in physics? - Thorondor Why is there no proof for existence of God in physics? ===== mimixco Because it's unprovable. Does that mean God does not exist? No, of course not. That's silly thinking. But it means you should 55cdc1ed1c
